the Supreme Court of the United States

What was the decision in the Dela case? It was that a Federal court had the right to issue an injunction to prevent a forcible obstruction of the carriage of the mails and of the inter state transportation of passengers and property, and that a violation of such an injunction might be punished as a con-case, known to lawyers as the bill of complaint, the supreme court said: "It must be borne in mind that this bill was not simply to enjoin a mob and mob violence. It was not a bill to command the keeping of the peace; much less was its purport to restrain the defendants from abandoning whatever employment they were engaged in. The right of any laborer, or any number of laborers, to quit work was not challenged. The scope and purpose of the bill was only to restrain forcible obstructions of the highways along which iner-state commerce travels and the free silverites is that under the present system the bunkers and capitalists are permitted to "corner" the supply of mon ey, and prevent it from being used for who would like to have it. They favor the largest possible use of money, not from patriotic or philanthropic motives, but because that is their source of gain It is their constant study to maintain the activity of their capital, for the sum-are slow to lend money or capitalists to make investments, on account of conditions of disturbance and uncertainty; but it is nonsense to say that they deliberately go to work to prevent the use of money when the conditions are reasonable safe. They are more apt to take risks that they should avoid in that relation than to neglect good opportunities. Their prosperity is dependent upon that of the people at large; their money is productive only when it is helping to advance the welfare of others. The banks are themselves constant borrowers. Their depositors are their creditors, and the money thus porrowed is loaned out at a rate of interest that gives a profit for the trouble and hazard in the case. The more they can borrow went to a heavy premium. At that 12 pages every week, in that way, the more they have to lend, and they borrow it only to lend it, not to put it aside and gloat over the possession of it. They must keep it in motion, or it will profit them nothing. The thing that they most dread is its accumulation on their hands without the chance to employ it. All talk about the corner ing of money in the sense of arbitrarily preventing the use of it is obviously richculous, therefore, when the fact is considered that the business of bankers and capitalists is to avert that very result, and to make as much profit as they can on loans and investments.

(Advertisement.); The Capital Question.

The question as to whether the capital should be removed to Sedaha, is of vast importance to the people of Missouri. As it is to come before the individual voter, every citizen in the state should study it carefully before render-OREGON, - - - - MISSOURI ing his decision. As it stands, Sedalia proposes to raise the funds necessary to the erection of complete capitol build-

It is an admitted fact that some change must be made in the present state buildings-their condition makes remodeling, at least, absolutely neces sary. If Sedalia carries out her pledges faithfully, which she will, a new set of buildings can be erected more cheaply than we can repair the old ones at Jefferson City. Again, the present buildings are not in keeping with the advancement of our state. It is a shame OREGON. - MISSOURI that Missouri, the pride of the central states, should have a capital which places her at such a disadvantageous contrast with her sister states.

Again Sedalia is more centrally located, and her accessibility scores a great point in her favor.
